Relevant Notes:

<sup>1</sup> Some works are not copyrightable. In order to qualify for protection under U.S. Copyright, works must represent an original work of authorship and be fixed in a tangible medium of expression. Ideas, concepts, principles, etc. are not covered by copyright. U.S. Government Documents (those works prepared by an officer or employee of the United States Government as part of that person's official duties) are not covered by U.S. Copyright and are in the Public Domain. However, works not covered by U.S. Copyright Law may still be protected under other laws. For more information, see <http://www.copyright.gov/title17/92chap1.html#102>

<sup>2</sup> A work is considered “published” if copies of it are distributed to the public by sale or other transfer of ownership, or by rental, lease, or lending. Offering to distribute copies or phonorecords to a group of persons for purposes of further distribution, public performance, or public display, also constitutes publication. A public performance or display of a work, however, does not of itself constitute publication.

<sup>3</sup> Works that were simultaneously published abroad and in the US are treated as if they are American publications. A work is considered “published” if copies of it are distributed to the public by sale or other transfer of ownership, or by rental, lease, or lending. The offering to distribute copies or phonorecords to a group of persons for purposes of further distribution, public performance, or public display, also constitutes publication. A public performance or display of a work, however, does not of itself constitute publication.

<sup>4</sup> A copyright notice generally includes the copyright symbol or the word “copyright,” the author’s name and the year of publication (not necessarily all in the same place). For more information on the specifics of what is required for an adequate copyright notice, see the Code of Federal Regulations 202.2 at: <http://www.copyright.gov/title37/202/37cfr202-2.html>. Prior to March 1st, 1989, a copyright notice [©] was required on published works in order for them to qualify for copyright protection. After 1977 and on or before March 31st, 1989, a work could be published without a copyright notice and still qualify for copyright protection, if registered with the Copyright Office within 5 years of publication. After March 1st, 1989, a copyright notice was no longer necessary for copyright protection. Unpublished works have always been protected, with or without a copyright notice.

<sup>5</sup> Works published after 1922 and before 1964 had to be individually renewed with the Copyright Office to prevent the expiration of copyright protection. Works that were not renewed have fallen into the public domain. The Stanford Copyright Renewal Database can help determine whether or not books published between 1922 and 1964 were renewed with the Copyright Office. To search the Stanford Copyright Renewal Database, go to: <http://collections.stanford.edu/copyrightrenewals/bin/search/advanced>. For other kinds of works, additional research will be required. For more information, see <http://www.copyright.gov/circs/circ15.pdf>.
